

We bid farewell to November with the last newsletter:

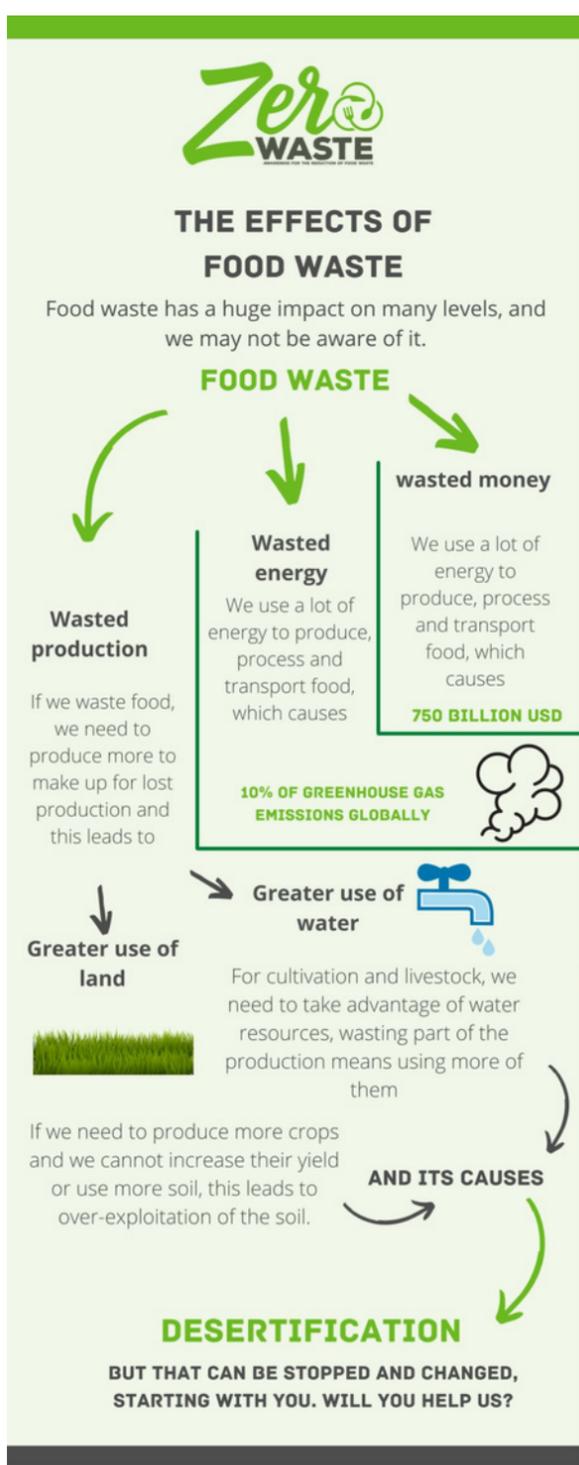

The School of families, Zero Waste's monthly newsletter bids farewell in this last issue, after helping to inform you about food waste. And we do so with one last infographic on the effects of food waste.

As always, if you are hungry for more, we invite you to continue exploring the resources available on our website.

Do you know the consequences of food waste?

If you have been following us for a while, many of these are probably familiar to you. You will already know how much food is wasted every year and how it could be used to feed the entire world's population if it were used properly.

But food production and distribution has a huge environmental impact... If we lose 30% of our food production, what effect does it have on the planet?

As you can see, the consequences reach far beyond the immediate effects we can normally see. And that is why it is so important to continue working to reduce our food waste.

Fortunately, many associations and organisations are working in this direction and as part of the Zero_Waste project we wanted to seek them out and highlight their work in our Good Practice Guide, the latest of our intellectual products, which you can already find on our website under the name IO3.

Many of these initiatives will also allow you to reduce your impact or your food waste, so we invite you to look for them and to collaborate with those that are close to you.

Although this newsletter will be the last, we still want to hear from you. Do you know of any other initiatives you would like to share? What did you like most about this project? Let us know!

Thank you for joining us on this journey!

Towards zero waste!